Colonial Pipeline Plans Expansion

Atlanta based Colonial Pipeline Company has announced plans for another major expansion which will increase the capacity of its common carrier transportation system by 27% to 1,464,000 barrels per day and will substantially relieve the shortage of home heating oils in the New York City area. This expansion, the fifth since the company was formed in early 1962, will cost a total of $113, 850,000, increasing total capital investment to more than $516, 000,000.

Colonial Pipeline transmission lines cross Appomattox County with a pumping station in neighboring Charlotte County at Hancock, between Red House and Brookneal.

H. R. West is senior operator of the Hancock station.

According to F. F. Steingraber, Colonial's President, unprecedented consumer demand for home heating oils, gasolines and other refined petroleum products in the east and south east, together with the requirements of the increased number of shippers utilizing the system has caused the company to prorate shipments for several years. The Colonial system already moves about one-seventh of the refined petroleum products consumed in the United States and serves 21 shippers oil companies.

The expansion program which will require approximately 15 months to complete, will take several forms, a 30 inch loop line will be laid parallel to the existing 36 inch mail line segment between Baton Rouge, La. and Atlanta, Ga., a distance of 461 miles. Four new pump stations, with a total of 13,500 horsepower, will be built on the new line adjacent to existing facilities. The specific location for these stations will be determined later.

An additional 2,312,000 barrels of storage will be constructed at Baton Rouge, La. facility.

Six new intermediate pump stations, with a total of 51,000 horsepower, will be added to the 32 inch mail line between Greensboro, North Carolina and the Dorsey tankfarm located

Planning Group Meets New Personnel

The initial step has been taken to finalize a Comprehensive Plan for Regional Planning District II, which includes Appomattox, Bedford, Campbell counties and the cities of Lynchburg and Bedford.

The Central Virginia Planning District Commission has adopted the overall program design sections of a comprehensive plan prepared by the Division of State Planning and Community Affairs in Richmond.

John C. Cole, Henry B. Pack, Jr. and W. E. Jamerson are commissioners from Appomattox county.

According to a resolution adopted at a Jan. 27 meeting the commission accepted the "goals and objectives and the overall program design of the Comprehensive Plan Study and accepts the balance of the study as the initial step in the preparation of a plan for the Central Virginia Planning District."

The commission's major priority since it was formed in September, 1969 has been to formulate a comprehensive development plan for the area. The plan is to serve as a guide for the physical development of the region and includes future planning suggestions for the following.

A system of major streets, highway and transportation facilities including airports serving the region in general.

A system of major parks and other recreational areas and facilities to serve the region.

Watersupply and sewage disposal facilities.

Drainage and flood control systems.

A general plan for best utilization of land throughout the region.

Facilites for community service of a type that might serve the region at large such as penal institutions, hospitals and welfare institutions.

When the complete plan is finalized copies will be sent to the local planning commissions of each governmental subdivision in the district for their recommendations. Then the plan must be adopted by the governing bodies of each governmental subdivision.

According to directives from the State Division of State Planning and Community Affairs, no planning commission can establish a policy which is not in conformity to the comprehensive plan once it is adopted. The division also requires that once adopted the plan must be reviewed by the commission at least every five years.

Executive director of the CVPDC, Thomas D. Smedley, said that upon ratification by its constituent governing bodies, all future public improvement plans and land use programs, sewer - water projects and other such facilities will have to conform to the approved comprehensive plan.

"It has been suggested that with the introduction of planning districts, Virginia is looking deeper into the future and has created a better vehicle through which local governments might solve some of its problems," said planning consultants in telephone conversations recently from the Richmond agency.

"Certainly, with our greatly increasing population, both economic and social pressures will demand more and more rational use of the land, more and better areawide services and better economic opportunities."

New personnel of Central Virginia Planning District Commission was introduced to commissioners and others attending the regular meeting of CVPDC on Jan. 27 in Bedford.

Frank Kenny, Senior Planner and Bud Harding, Criminal Justic Planner, were introduced.

Kenny and Carl Cress reported on their tour of the "Blackwell Community" construction

Everything Earlier

Full Impact Of New Voting Laws Nearing

In designating 1971 as the effective year for its sweeping state election law changes to provide regulatory punch, the General Assembly picked a good one. This is the year all General Assembly members and county officials, supervisors and constitutional officers, must seek re-election.

Present terms expire December 31 and, of course, the necessary primary or party convention preliminaries must come this summer climaxed by November's general election.

The new changes completely revise the calendar of dates for primary elections, state, county and municipal. They also put restrictions on absentee ballot voting, change the calendar of voter registration deadlines, require specific spotlighting on campaign expenditures, and set up a time table for statewide use of voting machines.

While leaving unchanged the traditional Tuesday after the first Monday (Nov. 2 this year) for the state and county general election, the new laws revise everything else earlier, from July to June, and June to May.

Primaries

Party primaries will henceforth be the second Tuesday in June (June 8 this time). Party conventions must be held between May 10 and June 8, with no nominations being made earlier than 30 days prior to the primary date.

Independent candidates must qualify by June 8 to run in the November general election, cuting 10 days from this time. They

They won by a two-point edge, 57-55, in a close, tense game. The Raiders, coached by Stanley Thomas, now have a 7-2 district lead and a 12-2 mark overall. If their winning ways continue, they're a sure bet for tournament play.
